

David Copperfield

by Charles Dickens (1812-70)

The story is told almost entirely from the point of view of the first person narrator, David Copperfield himself, and was the first Dickens novel to be written in this format. The story recounts the life of David Copperfield from childhood to maturity. David's father had died six months before he was born, and seven years later, his mother remarries -- but David and his stepfather don't get on and he is sent to boarding school. As David settles into life we are taken along with him and meet a dazzling array of characters, some of whom we will never forget and some of whom we won't want to remember! (Wikipedia)
